POLITICAL BUT NOT SOCIAL EQUALI-TY .- The Abolitionists give out that, although they want the negroes put on a political equality with white people, yet they do not mean to make the negroes their social equals. And they illustrate lishment of the empire. The influence their position by the remark that there of the United States Government has is no social equality among white people. This is a miserable subterfuge .-There are various social circles among white people, formed by degrees of maximilian, has attained his position, it may be said, mainly through the countricles are undefined and indefinable, and have no analogy to the great state. have no analogy to the question in issue, The social distinctions among white people are merely conventional, and are barbarous and antiquated invention for continually undergoing changes; while Mexico, and those who prophesied Maxiand black races are such as to preclude equality even under the same worldly circumstances. Who does not know this? And who is there so weak-minded as to be deluded by the sophistry of the Abolition speakers and writers on the question ?

[From the London Post, July 6.] The act of Juarez was one of inhuman and savage revenge. It was committed of mere brutality and with merely a pretense of being necessary for the public safety. In returning a verdict on he whole occurrences as they are before us, we may safely say the execution of heaven and men; and that to justify it ity deceptive-is to compound the operations of intended justice with those of deliberate and premeditated ven Chicago,

Ffrom the London Times, July 6.1 * * * The good freling and the common sense of the world will reject the excuses which the new governors of Mexico will probably make for this crime, European States can at least express their opinion of it as the reception they give to whatever persons Juarez may think fit to send to them as his representatives .-

We know not how the Government of Washington exerted itself to save the Arch duke; but if the American press represents the opinion of its readers, there has existed among Americans a trian, and a desire that he should be allowed to depart from the country in safe ty. The feeling of the Americans in Paris, always among the most educated and refined of their countrymen, has been shown by their determination to abandon or defer the celebration of the anniversary of independence. Such an act is the more creditable to them since their political sympathies are of course of Juarez, whose authority the United States have ever recognized, and to whom the American people have given important material assistance; the Texan frontier having been, in fact, the Liberal base of operations, and the quarter from which Juarez and his party received supplies of every sort. There is a general consent that this has been a cruel and dastardly act, and such a feeling will dastardly act, and such a feeling will only be deepened by time. We cannot but believe that after so many years of anarchy and political vengeance, the cup of Mexican evil doing is well nigh full, and that the time approaches when the land must be possessed by an abler, a nobler and a better race. From the London Herald, July 2.7 * * After Maximilian, the duty of restoring some principle of government in Mexico, devolves necessarily upon those who have prevented the estab. been exercised directly and openly in behalf of what is called the Mexican lib-Maximilian, has attained his position, it may be said, mainly through the countenance of Mr. Seward. For his acts the world will henceforth hold the American Government responsible. We have been told that an imperial dynasty was a barbarous and antiquated invention for Mexico, and those who prophesied Maximilian's failure, have been very busy in insuring the credit of their prediction.—Let us see how much better Mexico will be governed by the creature of Mr. Seward and by the native liberal party which America has preferred.
